TUESDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 23.

THE QUEEN'S JEWELS. -T. . jawels to be worn by the queen at the Satelites' ball, to be held in Louisville, Ky., on October 2, are on exhibition. The brilliant and hand some jewels attracted a great deal of attention yesterday, and are much more elegant and costly than these worn by the queen on a similar occasion iast year. The set cor-sists of ten pieces, all profusely studded with diamonds, rubles and sapphires, and if the gems were real would be valued at $30,-000 The helmet is the most elaborate and costly piece of the collection, and fairly sparkles with the rich diamonds, rubies and eapphires which are arranged around it. Large clusters of the same practicus stones ornament the sceptre which will be borne by the fair hand of the queen of the Satelites. The necklace is a bandsome band, set with rich stones, with six pendants of diamonds attached. The end of each pendant is creamented with a crescent of gold set with diamonds. The armlets, bracelets and earrings are fashioned after the same rich design, and are also ornamented with valuable jewels. The badge is one of the most beautiful articles of the collection, and is adorned by the head of Mercury, surrounded by a rich cluster of diamonds. jewels are of the most elegant and costly de-sign, and will be a fitting ornament to the grace and beauty of the lady who will wear

PAID THE DEBT .- In August, 1875, the house of Samuel Thornton, a prosperous cattle and lumber dealer of Burksville, Pa. was entered and $5,000 taken from a tin box in the attic. On Saturday morning Thornton was surprised by a visit from a stranger who said: "Thornton, I came to pay a debt. I am Charles Martin; it was I who stole the $5,000 fifteen years ago. There is your money, with six per cent interest, and my humble apology. It was poverty and ill health alone that made me commit the Martin then briefly related how he came to steal the money. He had been in very extreme circumstances and, had no means to relieve his wants. When he heard Thornton tell a party of friends about the box, knowing the family were away, he slipped out while the others were playing cards, secured the money and returned without any one noticing his absence. He went to Texas and engaged in the cattle business successfully, putting saide every year a little sum toward replacing the money he had stolen. All the rest of the party are dead.
